Course content

Why Attend

In today's fast-moving digital world, a crisis can escalate within minutes and severely damage an organization's reputation, operations, and stakeholder trust. Effective media management during crises is essential to control the narrative, reduce misinformation, and maintain public confidence. This course equips participants with practical skills to manage media relations, communicate effectively under pressure, and develop structured crisis communication strategies that protect organizational reputation and ensure timely, transparent messaging.

Course Methodology

- This course combines communication theory with realistic crisis simulations and media handling exercises. Participants will engage in press briefing role-plays, crisis scenario workshops, and message development exercises. Case studies from real-world corporate, governmental, and industrial crises will be analyzed. Practical sessions will focus on spokesperson training, media response planning, and digital communication strategies.
